Caffeine is an effective painkiller during exercise.

Dude, climbers have known this for years. Aleve and 'spro before you climb, Aleve and bheer after.

Which reminds me, time for a refill. Harpy, you need your cup topped up?

This looks like a good idea.

Blink? Wha?

...I think that's "yes."

Also, I'm giving you these files when I'm done, because it looks like a thing, but I'm not sure the thing it looks like is what it is.

Oh, I REALLY need more coffee, don't I?

I actually left some on your desk an hour ago. You drank it. I'll fetch you some more.

We don't need any more things. I'm enjoying the quiet life. And we have training Monday and Tuesday. (Tee Eff Ay Tee Pee, Tee Eff Ay Tee Pee.)

No, we do not need any more things. And I'm not saying anything else until you've had a chance to take a look. Because, you know, bias.

Coffee! Coffeecoffeecoffee! Thank you!

I can't see any way we can act on it, at least right now. So we still get the weekend. But we're going to want to watch for signs of this, I think. And I'm still not sure it's really there, anyway.

The weekend and the training, I hope. See you in Georgia!

Grah. Not sleeping. Weird dreams. Blame you. Or the spinach lasagna.

Sunny Georgia! It'll probably snow.

Repeat after me: the safe direction is when it's not pointed at the pilot's head.

(Charleston in August? Bring your SCUBA gear. You'll need it for the atmosphere.)

Oh yeah, I bought myself a gigantonormous bottle as a housewarming present. I used up my previous gigantonormous bottle in Texas. (Bleagh. I am never moving again.)
